Heritage of the Prague school to contemporary language teaching (with focus on English language teaching)

Abstract.

The aim of the paper is to assess the heritage of the Prague School to contemporary linguistics and language teaching. In Chapter 1 the focus is on works and ideas two founding members of the Prague Linguistic Circle, Anglicists V. Mathesius and J. Vachek and their contribution to the development of Slovak and Czech linguistics as reflected in textbooks and course materials for undergraduates at Slovak and Czech universities. The continuation and extension of the Prague School functional and structural concept is documented with references to works of their followers up to the present days. Chapter 2 contains the analysis of selected parts of the PLC Theses (1929), namely sections related to application of PLC principles in secondary school language teaching. The ideas expressed in the late twenties and thirties of the 20th century are confronted with present-day practice of foreign-language learning and teaching.

Abstract:

The collapse of socialism in 1989 has created economic and social opportunities for Czech and Slovak women. Under socialism, women's emancipation were restrained by household structure and gender ideology. Since 1989, the economic status of Czech and Slovak women has deteriorated. Policies to adjust employment to female needs, to re-train women, offering state-sponsored child care and create trade union equity between genders will begin to assist women in the post-socialist period.

Full Text:

The collapse of socialism in late 1989 has propelled dramatic economic and political reforms for Central and Eastern European countries. A shift from authoritarianism to democracy, and a rapprochement with Western European endeavors. Extensive interest in and analysis of these reforms in Central and Eastern Europe developed and attention to the concomitant social changes has been given. However, discussion of men's and women's productive and reproductive roles has been little attention. Valentine M. Moghadam, in the introduction to Democratization and Women in Transitional Economies (1993), points to the lack of attention to the problems of political and economic reform in the literature on women in transition, despite the fact that two decades of feminist scholarship have produced a large body of research on women's roles in the post-socialist period.
